WILDLIFE CRIME CONTROL BUREAU

INTRODUCTION

The internet has become the world’s largest marketplace, a key platform for commerce that is increasingly happening between buyers and sellers located in different countries, thereby driving international trade. Largely unregulated, anonymous, open 24 hours a day and virtually unlimited in reach, it offers endless opportunities for criminal activities, among them a flourishing illegal trade in protected wildlife. The Internet offers access to a pool of potential wildlife buyers that is far larger than the traditional market places.

Internet chat rooms have become the latest hotspot for clandestine trade in wildlife articles. Websites allow buyers and sellers to communicate through encrypted messages, view encrypted photos & encrypted videos of exotic and indigenous animals, decide a price and even complete the transaction online, before the consignment is dispatched. Trade of any native Indian species is illegal and falls under the Wildlife (Protection) Act, 1972. However, species protected under Indian laws may not be protected internationally and once the consignment crosses borders it may become a product which can be traded validly in the country concerned as per their local law. Traders use their knowledge of country specific local laws regarding wildlife protection. They evade attention of law enforcement agencies by using animal’s code names.

Considering the increasing threat of online wildlife trade, Wildlife Crime Control Bureau envisaged a multispecies enforcement operation, code named as “Operation WILDNET” in May 2017, “Operation WILDNET-II” in September 2019 and “Operation WILDNET-III” from 1st July 2020 to 30th September 2020 to drag the attention of the enforcement agencies towards growing online wildlife crime, resulting in registration of criminal cases against accused involved in online wildlife illegal trade. A huge number of e-commerce sites, online trade portals and social media platforms were identified, which were being used for online wildlife trade. Based on analysis of outcome of above operations, three meetings with representatives of online trade
